Annex 1: Detailed Terms of Reference

1. Purpose of the APW

This assignment's primary objectives are to conduct a baseline analysis of Bangladesh's health sector's GHG emissions and to develop a mitigation plan for designing a long-term, low-carbon health system. The specific objectives are to:

1. Identify the direct and indirect GHG emission sources of healthcare services (healthcare facilities including supply chain) and assess total GHG emissions at a primary secondary and tertiary level healthcare facilities.
2. Analyse carbon footprint of total health sector based on the GHG emission assessment at three levels of hospitals
3. Develop a method to track, monitor and project energy consumption on a dashboard.
4. Prepare an appropriate mitigation plan to develop a sustainable low-carbon health system which contributes to meeting the emission targets of the Paris Agreement

2. Background

Greenhouse gas (GHG) emission has become a global concern because of worldwide rapid planned/ unplanned industrialization, and competition for economic emancipation. Burning of fossil fuels for power generation, deforestation, farming and livestock production all contribute to the increase of greenhouse gases viz greenhouse effect. It is also the same in Bangladesh though the country is the lowest contributor of greenhouse gases as compared to the industrialized nations. Global GHG emissions must be drastically reduced if we want to avert catastrophic climate change.

According to a global estimate, energy accounts for 73.2% of GHG emissions, followed by industrial processes (5.2%), waste (3.2%), and agriculture, forestry, and land use (AFOLU) (18.4%).¹ It was also estimated that, the health care services Health care's climate footprint is equivalent to 4.4% of global net emissions.² In Bangladesh, in the base year (2012), the total GHG emissions account for 169.05 million tons of carbon dioxide equivalent (MtCO₂e). Energy Sector holds the highest contribution to the total GHG emission which was 55% of the total, followed by Agriculture, Forestry, and other Land use at 27% and industrial processes and other product use (IPPU) at 3%.³ The remaining emissions are from other different sectors including the health sector.

In Bangladesh, the health sector is one of the sectors that contribute to GHG emissions in the country and around the globe. The provision of healthcare services by the health sector involves the direct/indirect production and emission of greenhouse gases (GHG), including the procurement of goods, energy consumption, transportation, services, and technologies from a carbon-intensive supply chain during providing the health care services. Reducing national and global emissions can be significantly helped by a sustainable low-carbon health system.

Many countries of the world have already taken initiatives to measure sector-wise carbon footprint. Bangladesh is also walking in the same direction. The carbon footprint of a few sectors measured (Energy, industry etc.) and several remained yet, including the health sector. WHO Bangladesh has taken this initiative in collaboration with IEDCR and Directorate General Health Services (DGHS) to measure the carbon footprint of the health care services.

Rationale

Healthcare's carbon footprint is linked to health spending. The relationship between a nation's health spending and its health sector's climate impact is strong but not precise. Of general, the per capita healthcare GHG emissions in a country are higher the higher the spending. If health spending increases, the climate impact of the healthcare industry can be greatly reduced. In such a case, health sector development objectives, such as universal health coverage, might be linked to climate change adaptation efforts.

To comprehend the total situation, a baseline assessment of the GHG emission during the delivery of healthcare services is necessary. The assessment's findings will help determine the primary and secondary sources/sectors of GHG emission along with their respective quantities. Such data will eventually assist in the development of an action plan or a roadmap for the health system to establish a sustainable low carbon health system (including supply chains). The activity is undertaken considering the above-mentioned issues and justified.
